Electrifying prospects in EV

- We see higher utilisation on robust demand for power management ICs going into auto and data centres, and RF ICs for 5G mobile and base stations.
- MPI is a potential beneficiary of rising SiC adoption in EV due to its unique position as the backend provider for global SiC wafer market leader Cree.
- Raise FY21-23F EPS by 21-28%. Reiterate Add with a higher RM36 TP.

Robust order visibility from automotive and communication

In our recent discussion with management, it indicated that MPI is experiencing robust order visibility for FY21F due to 1) new customer win for cu-clip power packages going into servers at data centres; 2) a pick-up in sensor shipment volume, driven by recovery in the global automotive and electric vehicle (EV) market; and 3) higher demand for radio-frequency (RF) chips going into smartphones and 5G base stations, especially in China. We estimate that Carsem's plant in Ipoh is running in excess of 90% utilisation, while Carsem Suzhou (CSZ) has been running at full capacity since 4QCY20. Moreover, we expect the tightening supply condition in the semiconductor market to keep utilisation at high levels and this is likely to offset the seasonal demand weakness in the Mar quarter.

Exciting opportunity to ride SiC adoption in EV

MPI is a potential beneficiary of growing silicon carbide (SiC) adoption in EVs, given its unique position as the exclusive backend service provider for Cree (CREE US, NR). MPI has already installed and commissioned the first four assembly lines to package SiC products for Cree in Ipoh. MPI is in discussion with Cree to add more SiC assembly and packaging lines in view of the latter's production ramp-up, with a new wafer fab scheduled to begin production in CY22. Although we expect minimal contribution from SiC power management packaging service of just 2-5% to group revenue in FY21-22F, we are excited about the growth opportunities in SiC packaging beyond FY22F. Moreover, we believe the potential increase in SiC packaging beyond CY22F will help MPI meet its target of deriving 50% sales from automotive within the next 3-5 years.

Raising FY21-22F EPS by 21-28%

We raise our FY21-23F EPS by 21-28% to reflect higher utilisation and robust demand growth for chips from automotive, industrial and communication segments. In addition, we expect MPI to maintain capex in excess of RM250m in FY21F in order to cater to its capacity expansion at CSZ, driven by growing demand from China's domestic semiconductor ecosystem. To recap, CSZ registered 30% yoy sales growth in FY6/20 despite the impact from the Covid-19 pandemic in 1QCY20. Overall, we expect the group to deliver 3-year (FY20-23F) sales and EPS CAGR of 10% and 21%, respectively.

Reiterate Add with a higher RM36 TP

We keep our Add rating with a higher RM36 TP, now based on 28x CY22F P/E (from 26x), +1.5 s.d. above the sector mean (prev. +1 s.d.), in view of re-rating in the Malaysian tech sector P/E multiple due to strong long-term earnings growth prospects.

Potential to ride SiC adoption in EV

SiC is a wide bandgap semiconductor ➤

Silicon carbide (SiC) is a wide bandgap semiconductor base material that is made up of silicon and carbon. There are two types of bands within a semiconductor material; 1) conduction band and 2) valence band. In order for an electron to be conducted, it needs enough energy to bridge the bandgap between the conduction band and the valence band. The bandgap refers to the energy difference between the top of the valence band and the bottom of the conduction band.

In other words, bandgap represents the amount of energy needed for an electron to successfully make the jump between the valence band and the conduction band. Semiconductor is a material that can both conduct and insulate, and it will always have non-zero bandgap. The bandgap represents energy and is measured in eV (electron volts). The bandgap of SiC is 3.26 eV, compared to silicon (Si) at 1.12 eV or gallium arsenide (GaAs) at 1.42 eV. Wide bandgap materials are semiconductors with bandgaps greater than 3 eV.

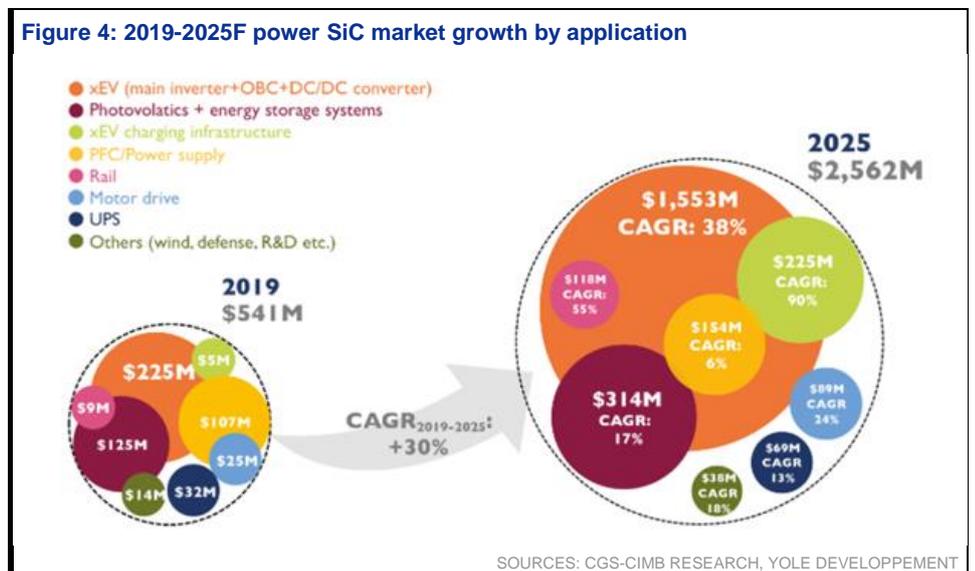

What is SiC value proposition to EV players? ➤

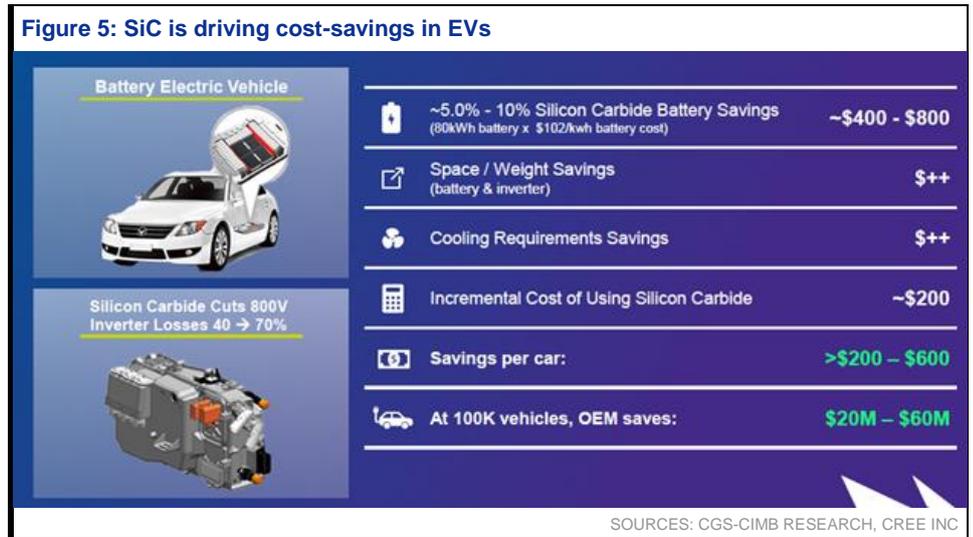

Wide bandgap materials such as SiC offer multiple advantages over semiconductor materials like Si or GaAs, due to its ability to handle higher voltages and power, higher operating temperature, faster switching, better efficiency and smaller form factor. In spite of these advantages, the semiconductor industry has been relatively slow in adopting the technologies given the higher component cost for SiC over Si. The advantages of SiC are particularly useful for electric vehicles (EV) because they allow the EV manufacturers to extend the range of the EV battery, reduce cooling requirement and minimise the footprint of the inverter and battery in EV.

Nevertheless, the significant shift in global automotive industry from internal combustion engine to electrification has created a massive market opportunity for SiC adoption. Market research group Yole Developpement projects SiC power management market to deliver 5-year sales CAGR of 30% from US$541m in 2019 to US$2.5bn in 2025F, driven by accelerating SiC adoption in inverter, on-board charger and charging infrastructure for EV. In terms of key players in the SiC market, Yole Developpement estimates Cree Inc (CREE US, NR) has over 60% market share in global SiC wafer production capacity.

Cree estimates EVs manufacturers would be able to save at least US$200 to US$600 at the system level for each vehicle using SiC materials for its EV powertrain inverter.

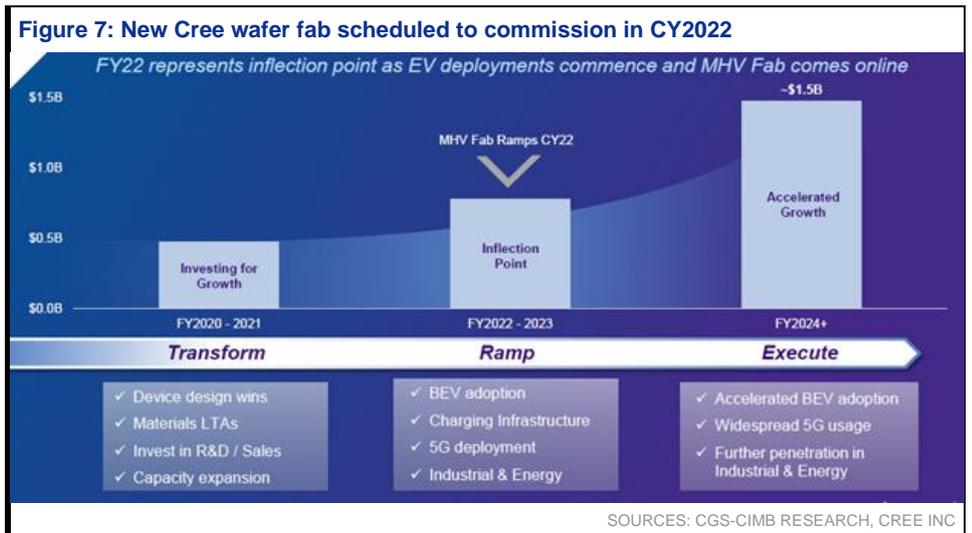

Riding on Cree’s SiC wafers capacity expansion ►

We expect MPI to benefit from growing demand for SiC power devices through its customer, Cree. MPI has a unique relationship with Cree due to its strength in semiconductor material packaging through its R&D division at Carsem Technology Center. MPI is the exclusive backend service provider for Cree. We gathered from MPI management that MPI has installed and commissioned four turnkey SiC assembly and packaging lines for Cree in Ipoh in 2HCY20.

We expect sales contribution from SiC packaging to make up 2% and 5% of MPI’s revenue in FY21F and FY22F, respectively. Although the SiC packaging contribution is relatively small to the group, we see room for higher SiC packaging contribution beyond FY22F, driven by the new capacity expansion at Cree. Cree is investing nearly US1bn to build a new wafer fab in Mohawk Valley, New York that is projected to increase its SiC wafer fabrication by 30x. The new plant is expected to commission in CY2022.

According to Cree’s Investor Presentation update in Oct 2020, it targets SiC business to record US$1.5bn revenue in FY6/24F, which implies 35% 4-year CAGR (FY20-24F). Hence, we see huge opportunity for MPI to capitalise on the expected production ramp-up at Cree from 2022F till 2024F.

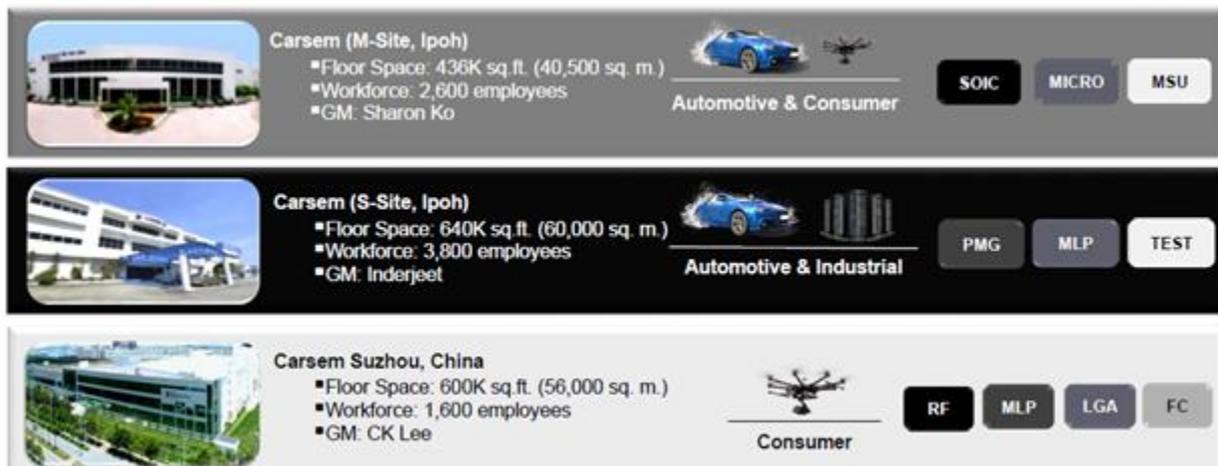

MPI targets automotive portfolio to contribute 50% to group revenue in 3-5 years ►

We believe the potential growth in SiC packaging and assembly beyond CY22F will help MPI to meet its target to derive 50% sales contribution from the automotive division over the next 3-5 years. To recap, the automotive segment contributed 31% to MPI's revenue in FY20, the second highest after the communication segment at 32%.

In spite of the challenges due to the US-China trade war and impact from the Covid-19 pandemic, automotive continued to be the fastest growing segment for MPI since FY17. Automotive segment sales delivered 9.2% sales CAGR in FY17-20. The group had benefitted from its strategic portfolio shift towards customised automotive solutions given that it had dedicated Carsem M-site in Ipoh for the assembly and packaging of automotive chips and sensors. We learned that automotive segment contributes 50-55% sales to Carsem M-site.

Apart from automotive, MPI has also benefitted from robust demand for cu-clip power management packages going into servers for data centres. Overall, we expect automotive and industrial division to be the main growth driver for the group, driven by increasing demand for power management chips going into EVs and data centres. We project a 3-year sales CAGR of 15% for MPI's automotive and industrial division in FY20-23F.

Raising FY21-23F EPS by 21-28% ➤

We raise our FY21-22F EPS forecasts by 21-28% to account for higher plant utilisation and increased shipment volumes from capacity expansion and new products. We expect earnings growth in FY21-22F to be driven by 1) new customer win for cu-clip power packages going into servers for data centres; 2) growing SiC power management packages going into inverter and on-board chargers for EV and EV charging infrastructure; and 3) higher demand for radio-frequency (RF) front-end module components going into smartphones and 5G network base stations, especially in China. Overall, we expect MPI to register a 3-year EPS CAGR of 21% (FY20-23F). Following our earnings upgrade, we raise our TP to RM36, now based on 28x CY22F P/E, which +1.5 s.d. above the sector mean (vs. +1 s.d. previously; 26x), in view of re-rating in Malaysian tech sector P/E multiple due to strong long-term earnings growth prospects.

Key catalysts and risks ➤

We see growing exposure to Chinese semiconductor customers, higher dividend payouts, and higher contribution from automotive and industrial segments as potential re-rating catalysts. Appreciation in RM/US$ and delay in end-demand applications recovery are key downside risks to our call.
